The first affliction Horace became acquainted with, arose from the death of the amiable Mr. Manners, whose fondness for the child had increased so much with his years, that he voluntarily offered to become his instructor; for though he wished him to imagine himself the son of Dobson, he thought it necessary to educate him for a more exalted situation; that in case he might ever discover his real parents, he might not disgrace them by total ignorance; and those hours which were not devoted to industry and labour, were all spent in the cultivation of his mind. The benevolence of Mr. Manners heart, and the generosity of his disposition, had prevented the possibility of saving a fortune; and though he frequently wished to pay by a portion of his income for his little favourite, yet the constant appeals which, were made to his humanity completely frustrated the desire, and he was not enabled even to leave him a trifling legacy. It was not Horace alone who had reason to lament the loss of the venerable Mr. Manners, for every inhabitant of the village, felt it; and as the character of his successor was totally opposite to his own, the contrast was...
