Land!! from the crew of the Santa Maria awoke the slumbering echoes on her shores, then trodden for the first time by Christian men; nearly a century and a half passed away ere any attempts were made at colonization by the European nations. This is not to be understood of voyages of exploration and discovery made by navigators in the employment of Spain, Portugal, France and England, either in search for gold or the hoped for passage to the East. As early as 1517 French fishermen, from the Basque and Norman coasts, themselves a maritime people, as well as those of Portugal, were the first to till the deep sea pastures of American waters. Having discovered the shoals of cod fish on the banks of Newfoundland, they carried home full fares long before a single Englishman had ventured into the same seas to prosecute this lucrative branch of industry. From the shores of...
