Excerpt: .a limited circle of the waters, you know those waters stretch out league upon league in the distance, they lave shores thousands of miles away, they are filled with sea monsters, they bear myriad sails; these things are present in your imagination, but they are too great for you to grasp, and so you label them with the word Sea. About every human being there is something mysterious, deep, high, full of mystery; you do not understand it, and you call it Soul. In the human being is a curious spiritual machinery in which words, visions, and impressions are stored, in which thoughts are woven, in which plans are made, in which the strange processes of logic are carried on; you do not understand this, and you label it Mind. Back of you is the record of the human race, the millions who have strived, hoped, and died, kingdoms that have risen and fallen; it is all too great for you to comprehend and so you label it History. The infinite imposes itself upon us even in small things. If you undertake to get the square root of 2 you find it runs into a decimal that never stops; you could continue that decimal forever and ever and the numbers would go on without cease. When we speak the word Time we are conceiving a small slice of infinity, for time has no beginning, no end. When we think the word Space we entertain...
